

BIOGRAPHY - DAVID LOUKIDELIS QC

David Loukidelis QC has degrees from Osgoode Hall Law School, the University of Oxford and the University of Edinburgh. He was appointed Queen's Counsel in British Columbia in 2010 and is a member of the Bars of British Columbia and Alberta.

David is an experienced legal advisor to governments and private sector organizations across Canada. David enjoys providing expert, practical advice to clients on a wide range of issues. He is well-known for his expertise in freedom of information law and privacy law, as well as lobbying and conflict of interest law. David also advises clients on administrative law and constitutional matters.

David was unanimously appointed by the Legislative Assembly of British Columbia as the British Columbia Information and Privacy Commissioner in 1999 and for a second term in 2005. In this capacity he was responsible for enforcement of the British Columbia Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, covering more than 2,000 public bodies. He also enforced the Personal Information Protection Act, which governs the privacy practices of BC's private sector. As Information and Privacy Commissioner, David gathered extensive experience deciding sensitive and complex issues, he wrote hundreds of freedom-of-information appeal decisions and many investigative reports.

He also served as Registrar of Lobbyists for British Columbia from 2003 to 2010, establishing the office, creating registration and enforcement systems and procedures, and reforming the law to improve its effectiveness while facilitating compliance.

David made many contributions to development of public policy through submissions and testimony to legislative committees on legal and policy issues affecting access and privacy laws, including testimony to Parliamentary committees on reforms to the federal Access to Information Act and Personal Information Protection and Electronic Documents Act.

In 2010 David became Deputy Attorney General of British Columbia and Deputy Minister of Justice. He was responsible for advising the provincial Cabinet and government on complex legal and constitutional matters. He was also responsible for executive management of the Ministry of Justice, which has over 6,500 employees. He led the development of policy and legislation across a broad range of subjects.

In late 2012, David was appointed as Chair of Alberta's Law Enforcement Review Board, the independent civilian oversight tribunal for police conduct and discipline in Alberta. He chairs appeal hearings and preliminary application hearings, and writes decisions on these matters.

David has taught privacy and freedom of information law in the law faculties of the University of Victoria, the University of Alberta and Thompson Rivers University. He has also taught environmental law and the law of restitution at the University of British Columbia. David has written numerous legal articles, research papers and policy proposals, and has been a frequent speaker at conferences in Canada and abroad.

BIOGRAPHY - DAVID LOUKIDELIS QC

David Loukidelis QC has degrees from Osgoode Hall Law School, the University of Oxford and the University of Edinburgh. He was appointed Queen's Counsel in British Columbia in 2010 and is a member of the Bars of British Columbia and Alberta.

David is an experienced legal advisor to governments and private sector organizations across Canada. David enjoys providing expert, practical advice to clients on a wide range of issues. He is well-known for his expertise in freedom of information law and privacy law, as well as lobbying and conflict of interest law. David also advises clients on administrative law and constitutional matters.

David was unanimously appointed by the Legislative Assembly of British Columbia as the British Columbia Information and Privacy Commissioner in 1999 and for a second term in 2005. In this capacity he was responsible for enforcement of the British Columbia Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, covering more than 2,000 public bodies. He also enforced the Personal Information Protection Act, which governs the privacy practices of BC's private sector. As Information and Privacy Commissioner, David gathered extensive experience deciding sensitive and complex issues, he wrote hundreds of freedom-of-information appeal decisions and many investigative reports.

He also served as Registrar of Lobbyists for British Columbia from 2003 to 2010, establishing the office, creating registration and enforcement systems and procedures, and reforming the law to improve its effectiveness while facilitating compliance.

David made many contributions to development of public policy through submissions and testimony to legislative committees on legal and policy issues affecting access and privacy laws, including testimony to Parliamentary committees on reforms to the federal Access to Information Act and Personal Information Protection and Electronic Documents Act.

In 2010 David became Deputy Attorney General of British Columbia and Deputy Minister of Justice. He was responsible for advising the provincial Cabinet and government on complex legal and constitutional matters. He was also responsible for executive management of the Ministry of Justice, which has over 6,500 employees. He led the development of policy and legislation across a broad range of subjects.

In late 2012, David was appointed as Chair of Alberta's Law Enforcement Review Board, the independent civilian oversight tribunal for police conduct and discipline in Alberta. He chairs appeal hearings and preliminary application hearings, and writes decisions on these matters.

David has taught privacy and freedom of information law in the law faculties of the University of Victoria, the University of Alberta and Thompson Rivers University. He has also taught environmental law and the law of restitution at the University of British Columbia. David has written numerous legal articles, research papers and policy proposals, and has been a frequent speaker at conferences in Canada and abroad.

BIOGRAPHY - DAVID LOUKIDELIS QC

David Loukidelis QC has degrees from Osgoode Hall Law School, the University of Oxford and the University of Edinburgh. He was appointed Queen's Counsel in British Columbia in 2010 and is a member of the Bars of British Columbia and Alberta.

David is an experienced legal advisor to governments and private sector organizations across Canada. David enjoys providing expert, practical advice to clients on a wide range of issues. He is well-known for his expertise in freedom of information law and privacy law, as well as lobbying and conflict of interest law. David also advises clients on administrative law and constitutional matters.

David was unanimously appointed by the Legislative Assembly of British Columbia as the British Columbia Information and Privacy Commissioner in 1999 and for a second term in 2005. In this capacity he was responsible for enforcement of the British Columbia Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, covering more than 2,000 public bodies. He also enforced the Personal Information Protection Act, which governs the privacy practices of BC's private sector. As Information and Privacy Commissioner, David gathered extensive experience deciding sensitive and complex issues, he wrote hundreds of freedom-of-information appeal decisions and many investigative reports.

He also served as Registrar of Lobbyists for British Columbia from 2003 to 2010, establishing the office, creating registration and enforcement systems and procedures, and reforming the law to improve its effectiveness while facilitating compliance.

David made many contributions to development of public policy through submissions and testimony to legislative committees on legal and policy issues affecting access and privacy laws, including testimony to Parliamentary committees on reforms to the federal Access to Information Act and Personal Information Protection and Electronic Documents Act.

In 2010 David became Deputy Attorney General of British Columbia and Deputy Minister of Justice. He was responsible for advising the provincial Cabinet and government on complex legal and constitutional matters. He was also responsible for executive management of the Ministry of Justice, which has over 6,500 employees. He led the development of policy and legislation across a broad range of subjects.

In late 2012, David was appointed as Chair of Alberta's Law Enforcement Review Board, the independent civilian oversight tribunal for police conduct and discipline in Alberta. He chairs appeal hearings and preliminary application hearings, and writes decisions on these matters.

David has taught privacy and freedom of information law in the law faculties of the University of Victoria, the University of Alberta and Thompson Rivers University. He has also taught environmental law and the law of restitution at the University of British Columbia. David has written numerous legal articles, research papers and policy proposals, and has been a frequent speaker at conferences in Canada and abroad.